Presidents Report

Dear Members,

I would like to announce that Alan McNevin has been appointed our new Secretary/Treasurer. He will be ably assisted by Paige Unitt. Congratulations on your appointments. We look forward to you both getting on with the job at hand.

At our next meeting on Monday 8th of April we will be holding our Annual Non Whiteface Cockatiel Table Show. A schedule is on page 17 of this edition of NCSA News.

Remember to renew your membership, it is now due. At our last meeting held in February we held our Annual Juvenile Table Show. Show Champion was won by Alan McNevin with a Normal Hen (Class 2). The Reserve Champion was won by Judit Prestidge with a Whiteface Pearl Pied AOV-AOC (Class 12) Well done Alan and Judit.

Hope to see you soon.

AUSTRALIAN BIRDS in BACKYARDS

Bourke's Parrot

What does it look like? Description:

Bourke's Parrot is a small parrot which is mostly grey-brown above and pinkish below. It has a prominent area of white around the eyes, giving a spectacled appearance. The male has a blue forehead band, with blue also on the bend of the wing, and a paler shade of blue on the flanks, side of rump and under the tail. The female Bourke's Parrot is similar, but duller. The Bourke's Parrot is also known as the Blue-vented, Night, Pink-bellied or Sundown Parrot; Blue-vented, Bourke or Pink-bellied Parakeet; and Bourke or Bourke's Grass-Parakeet.

Similar Species:

Bourke's Parrot is not like any other parrot, but in some circumstances may be confused with the Diamond Dove, Geopelia cuneata.

Where does it live? Distribution:

Bourke's Parrot is widespread across arid and semi-arid areas of the inland, from north-western New South Wales and south-western Queensland to the mid-coast of Western Australia, and from the Devil's Marbles in Northern Territory south to Port Augusta, South Australia.

Habitat:

Bourke's Parrot is found in mulga and other acacia scrubs, and in native cypress and other open eucalypt woodlands.

What Does It Do ? Feeding:

Bourke's Parrots feed mainly on the ground, and only occasionally in trees. Pairs, or small groups of four to six, feed on seeds of grasses and herbs. They need to be near a source of water, which they visit usually at dawn and dusk.

Breeding:

Bourke's Parrots form monogamous pairs. They nest in a hollow, usually vertical, of a dead tree or stump. The eggs are laid on decayed wood in the bottom of the hollow. The female incubates the eggs, leaving the nest once a day to be fed regurgitated seeds brought by the male, and both parents brood the young.
