Hooded Robin

What does it look like? Description: The Hooded Robin is a medium-large robin with a rather short slender bill and a moderately long tail which is square-tipped. Adult males are pied (black and white) with a black hood and back, white underparts, black wings, white shoulder bar and wing stripe. Females are similar to males but greyer with a brown-grey head and a dark brown wing with a white stripe. Juveniles are dark brown with off-white speckling, white markings on the upper body and white underneath. Hooded Robins are also known as Black or Pied Robins. They are usually seen in pairs or small groups and are rather shy and quiet. Their flight is short, swift and undulating (curving up and down) with the white in the wings and tail is obvious.

What does it do? Feeding: The Hooded Robin sits on exposed perches, such as dead branches and stumps and pounces on arthropods (mainly insects). It forages on or near the ground.

Breeding: The Hooded Robin breeds in monogamous pairs. They construct a cup-shaped nest of leaves and bark, bound with spiders' web, placed in a crevice, hollow or hole in a tree or stump. The female incubates the eggs.

Where does it live? Hooded Robins are found all over mainland Australia, except Cape York and eastern Gulf of Carpentaria or inland around the Simpson Desert, on the Nullarbor Plain or south of the Kimberley Ranges. They are more commonly found in south-eastern Australia from Adelaide to Brisbane.

Habitat: Hooded Robins are found in lightly timbered woodland, mainly dominated by acacia and/or eucalypts.

Seasonal movements: Not well known but believed to be sedentary.

Living with us: Clearing of woodlands in south-eastern Australia has caused a decline in populations of the Hooded Robin. Young birds are taken by foxes.

Genetics in Cockatiels

Recessive Genes:

Pastel Silver - Silver Spangle - Olive - Whiteface and Pied Pattern.

In recessive genes both males and females can be split to the colour or pattern unlike the sex linked gene where only the male can be split. There are a couple of different ways to get the results your are after. You can use two split birds.

Eg: 1 Normal split silver male and female

= 25% Genetically Normal

= 50% Normal split Silver

= 25% are visual Silver

If you don't have two visual coloured birds you are best using a coloured bird to a split bird that way you know all your normal birds are splits.

Eg: Visual Silver male + Normal split Silver

= 50% Normal split silver

= 50% visual silver.

The sexes of the birds can be changed and the outcome is the same. Replacing the colour with the pied or whiteface gene will also give you the same.
